

October 18, 2004

Re: New Broadcast Service Known as Low Power FM (LPFM)

To whom it concerns:

We currently enjoy listening to K-LOVE radio on 91.1 FM in Denver, Colorado. It is brought to us via a translator. With the introduction of LPFM, we could potentially lose a vital community service as well as a family-oriented radio station.

Through K-LOVE, we are apprised of world news and events as well as local happenings: music concerts, charitable opportunities, and local community outreach events. In Denver, the COMPA food ministry provides Thanksgiving meals to hundreds of families; we are updated regularly about how we can contribute through K-LOVE.

Without the above referenced public service announcements, our family would potentially miss out on numerous service opportunities. These are wonderful opportunities to work together as a family and community to build a stronger city.

K-LOVE radio provides not only service opportunities but also provides a safe haven on the airwaves. It is a relief to be able to turn on K-LOVE without experiencing a need to censor what our very young children hear. There are no objectionable song lyrics; the dj's are not vulgar; and the music is positive and encouraging. With so few public outlets for information and entertainment that provide a positive influence for our children, it would be a shame to remove such a wonderful and inspiring radio station.